Cervical Screening Summary

1 Tell me about cervical screening

- Women need regular screening to check for cervical cancer or early signs that indicate a higher risk of developing cervical cancer in the future.
- Cervical cancer has been linked to infection with certain types of human papilloma virus (HPV).
- HPV viruses are very common, and are usually cleared by the body naturally.
- In 2007, Australia began vaccinating young women against the two types of HPV with the strongest links to cervical cancer - types 16 and 18.
- In December 2017, Pap tests were replaced with a test for specific HPV types. This test has been found to be a better screening test for both vaccinated and unvaccinated women.
- All women between 25 and 74 years of age will be offered HPV screening at least every 5 years.

2 Your cervical screening summary

You will need to return for your routine HPV test in 5 years

Your result has been categorised as low risk

3 What Next?

You will need to be rescreened in November 2022.

The National Cancer Screening Register will send you an invitation to remind you when your next screening test is due.

Remember, if you experience any symptoms such as pain, bleeding or discharge you should see your doctor or healthcare professional.
